How often has the reader seen the following: "It pays to be clean?" Most every one has read that motto and pondered over it only to be convinced that the logic is right; and next to decide that the originator of the short phrase must be progressive to select such a catch phrase.

The little phrase is the slogan of the American Linen company, one of Ogden's most progressive business institutions. It is the purpose of the Linen company to supply clean linen to all business houses. That it fulfills this purpose in a satisfactory manner is evident by the fact that there are but few business establishments in the city but what keep clean with the aid of the local company.

The linen people have a simple system, too. If the grocer, butcher, druggist, restaurateur, saloon owner or anyone else desires linen coats, aprons, towels or table linen, he need but to send in an order to the house for what he desires and from that time on employees will call regularly to carry away the soiled linen and leave clean in place. The soiled linen is laundered in one of the finest laundries in the state. Considering the service and the cleanliness, the cost is but little.

E. B. Stone, the present manager, has held that position for about sixteen years, or from the time when the company first established a house in this city. At that time the linen was delivered and gathered in a hand cart and later a one horse and wagon was used while the laundrying was done in some of the other laundries.

Now the linen company is housed in a modern brick building, 80 by 150 feet. The plant, which is well lighted and ventilated, contains only the most modern laundry machinery. Since 1905, the company has occupied its own home. There are twenty-six employees.

Believing in its own motto, the company maintains an absolutely clean and sanitary laundry and invites inspection. The floors are of concrete easily flushed. There are enough windows to throw light in all corners, and it can be easily seen that the place is clean. The company is justly proud of the high character and neatness of its employees.

Visitors who take advantage of the standing invitation to inspect the laundry, would enjoy the trip through the various departments, from the time the soiled linen arrives at the laundry to the time it is stacked up in neat piles in the clean linen department ready to be delivered to customers.

Employees sort the soiled linen into various groups preparatory to placing it in the steam operated tubs. There are six of the double cylinder tubs and most of them are busy all the time. Boiling water and soap, made at the plant, are used without stint. Each tub of laundry is treated to twelve changes of water. The soap and water are applied until the clothes are clean. Then the bleach, the rinse and blue waters are added in succession.

From the tubs in the wash room, the linen is carried in roller baskets to the driers. The water is thrown from the linen by centrifugal force. The wet wash is placed in a hopper filled with perforations and the hopper is rotated so rapidly that the water is forced from the cloth.

While the centrifugal machines do not dry completely, a state is reached that will permit of the linen being placed in the hot air tumblers. There are two of the machines, whose duties consist in rolling around the linen while a current of hot air is forced through it. The particular advantage of the tumblers is that turkish towels and other material come from the machine delightfully soft and fluffy while the old nap that is loose is blown into a waste holder.

Aprons, towels, napkins and table cloths are ironed by means of a mangle. Girls take the articles removed from the tumblers and start them through the rollers while other girls, on the opposite side, receive the ironed linen and fold it for the department from which it is sent out over the city.

A special department is set aside for the white linen coats. Two steam operated ironers are used upon the coats and then hand ironers give the finishing touches.

Another department is the sewing section. All linen articles, with the exception of the coats, are made at the laundry. The general excellence of the plant extends from the office through every department, including the stable is declared to be the most sanitary in the city. The floors are of concrete and may be flushed at any time. All arrangements were designed toward cleanliness and were made for the comfort of the animals stabled.

THE ECONOMY OF BRICK

No man builds without counting the cost. Beauty he may wish, but COST comes first with all, excepting a few multi-millionaires who use brick anyhow.

The popular impression that wood makes the cheapest house is an error.

The first cost does not effect certain principals that must be considered. These in brief are: A wooden walled house cannot be prevented from rapid deterioration with best care. A wooden house must also be constantly be repaired and repainted at great cost.

A lot of this expense for upkeep is eliminated in a brick house.

Figure it out—there's a difference—a difference that means dollars and cents to you.
